

Having worked in small market commercial radio for the last 40 yrs I am surprised that you folks are again trying to break the only truly free broadcast system in the world. My job description was chief engineer for several radio stations in southern Oregon and Alaska. You have never listened to the small guy before but I think you should this time, what's left of broadcasting is in the small markets and not the mega-markets. Don't open the door for more large conglomerates which continually lie in their presentations to the fcc. The only way for the small market to get local news and entertainment is from a locally owned and operated station. tn timer
